Stories from the Vineyards

BRION WISE

What drew me to Moon Mountain is that I was looking for something that reminded me of being in Italy. When I drove in here on a foggy morning it absolutely took me to another dimension. And so, I started becoming interested in this property. It had no road into it, no electricity, never been lived on; it had been land-locked because there was no right-of-way. It intrigued me from a number of different points of view; but... the feeling that it had when I drove in here on that foggy morning absolutely took me to another dimension in what I was trying to do, which was to start another phase and make wine.
